Description Summary:

The Folck's Mill site is the location of the Civil War engagement locally known as "The Battle of Folck's Mill". The site is marked by the remains of a large 19th-century grist and saw milling complex on the floodplain of Evitts Creek, just north of Route 40 and I-68 east of Cumberland, Maryland. The stone foundation of the mill is the principal feature of the site.

General Description:

The Folck's Mill site is located in a wooded area a short distance north of Route 40 and I-68, east of Evitts Creek. The principal feature of the site is the surviving stone mill foundation, measuring approximately 30 by 40 feet. The foundation is built into a partially-excavated bank on its east and north sides; the south and west sides are fully exposed above grade and stand one story high. The foundation is constructed of roughly-dressed masonry. The west elevation has four openings: a wide entrance in the northernmost bay, a window opening to its right, a former doorway (altered to a window), and another window opening in the southernmost bay. The south wall has a single window opening. Water runs through a stone-lined trough along the interior south wall, and exits through an arched, dressed-stone opening at the southern corner of the west wall. At the east end of the trough, a similar arch appears at the top of the foundation, just above grade. The north wall is the least intact.

An undated early 20th century photograph shows the mill as a three-story, gable-roofed brick building resting on a stone foundation. Damage to the brickwork in the southwest corner of the mill has been interpreted as having resulted from artillery fire during the skirmish.

A short distance northeast of the mill foundation is a small square foundation constructed of poured concrete. Its function is unknown, but it appears to postdate the period of significance. Other elements of the mill complex have vanished, including a barn which reportedly caught fire during the battle and burned to the ground.

The mill site is owned and maintained by the Maryland State Highway Administration. It is periodically cleared of encroaching vegetation.

Section 8 Page 1

Summary Statement of Significance:

The Folck's Mill Site is significant under Criterion A for its association with the Civil War "Battle of Folck's Mill." On August 1, 1864, Union troops commanded by General Benjamin F. Kelley engaged General John McCausland's Confederate forces as they advanced along the Baltimore Pike towards Cumberland, Maryland after having burned the town of Chambersburg, Pennsylvania two days previously. The grist and saw mill complex of John Folck was located at the center of the action. The Confederates took shelter behind the mill buildings as Kelley's troops fired from the hillside above them; Folck's barn was hit and burned down. The skirmish lasted through the afternoon and into early evening. As Union reinforcements approached, the Confederates retreated into West Virginia. The "Battle of Folck's Mill", while resulting in relatively few casualties and only limited damage, is credited with turning the Confederates away from Cumberland, and possibly sparing the city from Chambersburg's fate.

Resource History and Historic Context:

The stone foundation supported a three-story brick mill building, constructed in the early 19th century by Thomas Beall (of Ninian) and originally known as Pleasant Mill. Jacob Hoblitzell, whose wife Amy Beall Hoblitzell was one of Thomas Beall's heirs, purchased the property from the estate in 1819. After John Hoblitzell's death in 1830, John Folck Sr. purchased the mill property. In 1840, John Folck Jr. purchased the mill from the estate of his father. Around the turn of the twentieth century, the Wolfe family purchased the Folck's Mill property, and operated the business for a short time.

On August 1, 1864, Union troops commanded by General Benjamin F. Kelley engaged Confederate forces under General John McCausland as they advanced along the Baltimore Pike towards Cumberland after having burned the town of Chambersburg, PA two days previously. The "Battle of Folck's Mill", while resulting in relatively few casualties and only limited damage, is credited with turning the Confederates away from Cumberland, and possibly sparing the city from Chambersburg's fate.

After razing Chambersburg by fire, McCausland's troops (numbering over 2,600) moved southwesterly toward McConnellsburg, PA and Hancock, MD.

About noon on July 31 the Confederates reached Hancock. Two companies of the 153rd Ohio and Co. K, 2nd Maryland Potomac Home Brigade commanded by Capt. Peter B. Petrie withdrew from the Hancock area in the face of the formidable enemy invasion. McCausland advanced toward Cumberland via the Baltimore Pike (present U. S. 40).

In Cumberland, Union General Benjamin F. Kelley commanded units of two West Virginia infantry regiments; three companies of Ohio infantry and one Ohio Cavalry unit; a battery of Illinois Light Artillery and Battery B, 1st Maryland Light Artillery, and a few hundred stragglers. Other Union troops were with General Averell in the Hancock area.

Kelley positioned part of his men in the fortifications on the hill above Christie Road, overlooking Folck's Mill from the west on August 1. The Confederate advance companies reached the area about 3 pm, and Battery L, 1st Illinois Light Artillery, opened fire. McCausland was surprised and fell back, taking shelter behind the mill structures. Confederate sharpshooters opened a galling fire on the Illinois battery, but Kelley fired back at them, rendering them ineffective.

McCausland rapidly deployed a line of skirmishers and placed four cannon on a high hill near the Baltimore Pike. The 14th Virginia, 16th Virginia, 17th Virginia, and 22nd Virginia Regiments were formed in a line of battle a short distance behind the residence of Jesse Hinkle.

The ensuing engagement lasted for several hours, consisting mainly of artillery firing, interspersed with an occasional volley of musketry. At 7:45 pm the shooting stopped, and McCausland retired for the night, with both sides occupying the same ground as they started with.

The dwelling, mill, and barn of John Folck were in the range of the Union guns, and were struck several times. The barn, containing almost the entire year's production, was set afire by an exploding shell and completely destroyed.¹

Gen. Bradley T. Johnson arrived the following day and consulted with McCausland. The two agreed that with Kelley's sizable force in front of them, Averill behind them at Hancock, and since they were unfamiliar with the area, it was inadvisable to prolong the engagement. McCausland asked Maj. Harry W. Gilmor to find a route back to Virginia, so as to save the ammunition wagons and artillery. At 4 pm Gilmor encountered a local Southern sympathizer who informed him of the road to Oldtown nearby, and Gilmor notified McCausland that he had found a way to the Potomac.

McCausland advanced twice during the afternoon, once to make Kelley reveal the number of his men and their positions, and again after he had consulted with Johnson, in order to keep Kelley on the defensive as the Confederates organized their withdrawal. Johnson's Brigade withdrew at [Private Peregrine D. Layland Letter, Co.K 156th Ohio Volunteer Infantry Copy of transcription provided to Dan Masters by Joe Becker, Clemmons, North Carolina.

Peregrine "Perry" D. Layland enlisted as a Private in Co.K, 156th Ohio Volunteer Infantry on May 2, 1864 and was mustered in May 15, 1864 in Columbus, Ohio. His company spent its first months in service near Cincinnati before being moved to Cumberland, Maryland at the end of July 1864. On August 1st, it was involved in a fight near Folck's Mills, Maryland with Confederate cavalry under Gen. John McCausland following the burning of Chambersburg, Pennsylvania. Private Layland returned home unharmed and reenlisted in Co.D, 193rd Ohio Volunteer Infantry on February 8, 1865 and served through the rest of the war in the Shenandoah Valley. He mustered out August 4, 1865 at Winchester, Virginia. Below is a transcription of the letter, addressed to his sister Rebecca.]

August the 2, 1864
Cumberland City, Maryland

Dear Sister Rebecca:

... Well I have seen what they call the elephant, we had a fight last Monday. I guess there wasn't anyone killed in our regt. as I know of but there may be. We have seen a little harder times than we had in Kentucky. There was two thousand rebbles. That is the report but there is so many reports that I can't tell shure how many there was and don't know how many there was of us. There was two regt. of us that I am sure of- and three pieces of artillery but we whiped they out. The fite commenced about three o'clock P.M. and lasted until 8 o'clock. The the rebs fell back and left in the night some time. But I can't give any account how large a loss was on the other side. I tell you what. The shells came pretty close to us for a while. Our company was close to our artilery and the rebs was throwing shells at them, trying to whip them out or spile there cannon.

I am about 500 miles from home. Our time will be out the 22 day of August. Our time didn't commence till the 10th day of May. That was the day we was sworn into service. ...

I have bin having a midling hard time since we came here. We didn't have any sleep for 4 nights of any account. It took us two days and nights to come here. We started from Cincinnati, the 27 of July and didnt sleep any on the cars when we was comeing.

I have very good health ever since we came out. Well I must close for this time. My pen is very pore and have a very poor place to write and will do beter next time.

Perhaps I can give a better account of the battle nixt time.

Good bye for this time

The mill site does not retain sufficient integrity to meet National Register Criterion C as an example of a type of structure or complex associated with milling in the 19th century. It is referenced in John McGrain's comprehensive Molinography of Maryland only in connection with its association with the Civil War skirmish. Other better preserved 19th century mills survive in Allegany and Garrett Counties to represent their type, e. g., Taschenberger Grist Mill, AL-III-B-028, 1856; Stanton's Mill, G-II-C-013, c. 1859 on late 18th century foundation (NR).

Cumberland, Maryland
First Quarter of 1800's

Folck's Mill was a brick grist mill built early in the first quarter of the nineteenth century. For over a hundred years, it served as a commercial center and a mill for local agricultural produce. The mill was damaged in August of 1864 when it was the scene of a day-long skirmish between Confederate and Union troops. All that remains of the various mill structures and the home of the owner are stone foundations.

The ruins of Folck's Mill are located north of Route 40 between Evitt's Creek and Dehaven Road.

All that remains of this once lucrative business and home are stone foundations of a mill, a barn, and an ice house. The large grist mill made of handmade brick was powered by a water driven wheel. Local history suggests that a sawmill was also driven by this wheel. Evitt's Creek, which supplied the power was relocated in connection with the road construction that caused the demolition of the buildings.

The builder and original owner of the Folck's Mill complex was Thomas Beall of Ninian. In 1830 the property was sold to John Folck Sr. ¹ Aside from its agricultural and commercial importance as a mill for local farm produce, Folck's Mill's fame is largely derived from its being the scene of Allegany County's only Civil War fighting.

Confederate troops under the Generals Ransom and McCausland who had burned Chambersburg, Pa., were advancing on Cumberland in late July 1864. With plenty of warning Union troops and three companies of local volunteers met the Confederates at Folck's Mill on July 31. After a little rifle firing the skirmish developed into a day long artillery duel. This ended when the Confederates broke the engagement and crossed the Potomac at Greensprings unhampered. ²

The property eventually passed on to the Wolfe family who were operating the mill around the turn of the century.

(9A) Folck's Mill

Folck's Mill, which has long since disappeared except for its foundation, was situated on Evitts Creek at the Baltimore Pike. Late in the day of July 31, 1864, a Union force under the command of General Kelly met and repelled a 2,000-man Confederate force that was marching on Cumberland. The engagement never became heated as it was begun by cannonading which was followed by scattered musket fire. With the covering of darkness, the Rebel soldiers retreated south and crossed the Potomac River at Green Spring.
